SANTA ANA, Calif., March 18 (AP) — G. Gordon Liddy, who spent more than five years in prison rather than disclose what he knew about Watergate, has opened a school that teaches private security.

Mr. Liddy, a former agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, charges $1,500 a week for training in his Academy of Corporate Security and Private Investigation. The academy has no headquarters, instead bringing classes to its students.

Mr. Liddy, 56 years old, also operates a security company that offers its services in drug investigations and detection of illegal surveillance.

"During Watergate, I became known for trying to penetrate high-security places," he said. "I thought we could specialize in industrial counter-espionage, capitalizing on my knowledge and my name."
